

13 March 1952

MEMORANDUM FOR: Mr. Dulles

[redacted] called again and since you were not available I spoke to him. He is in Washington today and anticipates a meeting with [redacted] at 4:30, and expects also to see General McClure, and possibly Senator Benton, in furthering his project. The appointment with [redacted] was made at the suggestion of [redacted] whom he has also called during his present stay in Washington.

The Deputy Director has indicated that he does not want to see [redacted] since [redacted] has taken care of the situation.

25 YEAR RE-REVIEW

ILLEGIB

27 February 1952

MEMORANDUM

[redacted] who two weeks ago had sent Mr. Dulles a memorandum on [redacted] called Mr. Dulles several times yesterday and today, and being unable to reach him spoke to me. He was interested in finding out what reaction there had been to his paper. He indicated that he would be happy to come down to Washington and talk with those concerned about it. He noted in passing that [redacted] had both seen the memorandum and had "recommended" it. He noted also that he had sent a copy to the Chief of Information of NATO but because of the Lisbon meetings was not surprized that he had heard nothing of it.

I told him that the memorandum was being studied by those concerned in this Agency and that I knew nothing of their views as to whether it was a valuable suggestion or not. I took his telephone number [redacted] and said that either I would call him back or would have someone call him respecting the memorandum.

I checked with [redacted] to whom this memorandum had been referred and found that it was still being studied in his shop. [redacted] called later in the day to say that he had had an evaluation of the suggestion in the memorandum, essentially negative in character, and offered to talk with [redacted] himself by telephone. He intends to do this tomorrow. He will politely note that the suggestion though interesting is for the time being impracticable.

copy to [redacted]